Fund Commentary - PIMCO High Yield Bond Fund

- The Fund invests at least two-thirds of its assets in a diversified portfolio of high yield fixed income instruments.
- The Fund may invest wholly through financial derivative instruments collateralized debt obligations, credit default swaps and asset-backed securities in order to meet its investment objective and such investment policies or portfolio management techniques may as a result lead to a higher volatility to the net asset value of the Fund. Please refer to the "General Risk Factors" of the respective prospectus for details.
- Financial derivative instruments may be used to reduce risk but may involve risks different from, or possibly greater than, the risks associated with investing in bonds. Therefore the Fund may not be suitable for investors who wish to invest in funds that invest solely in bonds, which are commonly perceived as low-risk products.
- Investing in any of the instruments mentioned above may involve substantial credit/counterparty, market and liquidity risks. Given the nature of this Fund, an investment in the Fund may not be suitable to hold as a substantial part of an investor's assets and the entire value of your investment may be lost.
- The investment decision is yours, but unless the intermediary and/or investment adviser who sells it to you has explained why, including how investment in the Fund would be consistent with your investment objectives.
- In making investment decisions, investors should not solely rely on the information contained in this material.

Investment Objective

The Fund invests at least two-thirds of its assets in a diversified portfolio of high yield fixed income instruments.

What happened in the market

The high yield market recouped some of its losses from May 2010, even as market volatility, European sovereign risk, financial reform and weak economic data dominated headlines. Although primary market activities in June 2010 remained light, as outflows moderated over the course of the month and turned into inflows, 17 deals priced totaling USD7.2 billion. As flight-to-quality took hold, demonstrated by the dramatic rally in Treasuries, higher rated bonds such as BBB and BB similarly outperformed B and CCC bonds in the month.

Outlook and strategy

Technicals will likely continue to come under pressure from broader macroeconomic events, but in general should remain supportive of the high yield market. Fundamentals should continue to improve as issuers benefit from stronger earnings, improved balance sheets, and an extended runway for debt maturities. While valuations improved, following material spread widening linked primarily to exogenous events, security selection will still be the key to finding value.
