

- Asian stocks ended mixed on Wednesday as markets saw muted performance ahead of US GDP data and the Federal Reserve's monetary policy announcement. The International Monetary Fund warned of potential risks to global growth, raising caution among investors.
- US stocks ended the day mixed as the release of a report from the Commerce Department showing that U.S. economic activity rebounded by more than anticipated in the second quarter generated some optimism about the economy, but also fueled speculation that the Fed could begin raising interest rates sooner than previously anticipated.
- European stocks fell sharply on Wednesday on downbeat corporate earnings. Investors remained concerned about geopolitical tensions, as the U.S. joined Europe in imposing new sanctions on Russia for backing separatists in Ukraine.
- > Treasuries fell after a report showed the economy grew faster than forecast in the second quarter while the Federal Reserve trimmed the monthly pace of bond purchased for the sixth consecutive meeting.
