Portfolio Commentary

- ✓ The Portfolio returned 1.76% for the month of May.
- ✓ Stronger economic conditions and increased trade flows, as well as historically low valuations compared to global equities, make emerging markets attractive.
- ✓ Fed chairwoman Yellen has made it clear that monetary policy tightening will start in 2015. Expect greater volatility.
- ✓ In U.S., earnings expectations are held back by US dollar strength and GDP growth fears.
- ✓ Greece liquidity issue is adding volatility to Europe equity market.
- ✓ BOJ QQE program and reallocation of government pension fund assets into equities provide firm support going forward to Japan.
- ✓ In China, cyclical deceleration continues – mainly due to a weakened housing market and investment activity. We expect another interest rate cut and more reserve requirement ratio cuts to support money growth before the end of 2015.
- ✓ Falling inflation and improved central government finances will allow India room to stimulate its economy by using both monetary and fiscal policy tools. However, major economic reforms remain conspicuously absent.
- ✓ Investment Grade Corporate or Sovereign Bonds with low yields provide limited potential. However, this asset type may work well as a stabilizer in a portfolio that has other higher-risk assets.
- ✓ Yen and Euro remain vulnerable to further depreciation and hence it makes more sense to hedge the currency exposure.
